Good account of field tactics during Market GardenVon bodo71Inspired by Band of Brothers I tried to find good documentation about what really happened to the 101st Airbourne Division. This part of Operation Market Garden ist their account of the big battle in Holland. The book describes the actions taken by the British XXX Corps to penetrate the border zone and the following combat around Eindhoven to some important bridges involving American 101st Airborne. This was the first part which should ensure reinforcements for the other parts taken by American 82nd Airborne and the British 1st Airborne leading to Arnhem. The description is very detailed down to platoon level and actions of certain characters. But also does the book take a look at the big picture with maps with movements shown. Because I am a history buff especially about the European Western Front in WWII this was really interesting stuff to read. The book is definitely no easy read for somebody who just wants to read about Market Garden and it lacks some better timetables. But for the interested reader who wants to access a certain level of detail and already has a background, this is absolutely what you want. Besides the book gives travelling hints about where to go for sightseeing in Holland.

It should have been easy as The Screaming Eagles (101st Airborne) had been dropped to hold it. The reasons for the ensuing delay which led to disaster at Arnhem remain controversial and make for gripping reading.
