Fond memories of a good book.Von davidarkless@writeme.comAlthough this book is listed as illustrated by Jim Marsh, I must have gotten the cheap hardcover when I paid 50 cents at the used book store in the mid-50's. I remember it as the first book that I read that had no pictures. I then first leared of the movie screen in my mind as I fell in love with the mountain people and their ways. Writing like this will always be in style for children and adults alike.0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. undeniably heart warmingVon Ein Kundethis is one of the first books I read when I started reading adult fiction and even at 37 I enjoy reading this great human life like book KurzbeschreibungThe Sparks family salty old Peg Sparks, his wife Arn, and their sixteen year old son Sparkie lived in the Plum Grove Hills in a one room cabin. They don't have a lot, but they would not turn a stray hound dog away from their door and certainly not a stray boy like pale, spindly Didway Hargis, who has run away from his wealthy home in town.The boy from Greenwood, Did Hargis, and the boy from the Plum Grove Hills, Sparkie, become good friends. Did learns to love the life of the hill people as he becomes one of the Sparks family. He and Sparkie sleep in the hayloft, each with a hound-dog for warmth. At night they hunt foxes and possums, and Did learns the difference between the long, slow "trail bark" of the hounds, and the rapid, excited bark that means that the hound has treed a possum. By day the boys work the farm. Did becomes accustomed to the world of Plum Grove, and he comes to love the Sparks family and their neighbors, who are generous and kind. He grows strong, tanned, and happy.KurzbeschreibungThe Sparks family salty old Peg Sparks, his wife Arn, and their sixteen year old son Sparkie lived in the Plum Grove Hills in a one room cabin.
